Note on a 2010 article about government action and obesity

New owner notice. This domain has a new owner. This site is not affiliated with the former Animate project or the European Commission.

A PDF copy of a published magazine article used to be available at this address. We do not reproduce that article. This one-page note is our own and gives no health, weight or diet advice.

The article

Title: Why governments must lead the fight against obesity
Authors: Jeffrey Algazy, Steven Gipstein, Farhad Riahi and Katherine Tryon
Published in: McKinsey Quarterly, 2010
Publisher: McKinsey & Company, mckinsey.com

Summary in our words

The article was a policy essay for decision makers. It argued that governments are in a position to coordinate action across many sectors at once. It was not written as guidance for families.

Where to find it and related official information

Publisher link unverified: HTTP 403 access block during our browser check. This does not show that the article was removed.
Archived copy of the old file (Internet Archive): web.archive.org

CDC, Obesity: https://www.cdc.gov/obesity/

CDC, Physical activity guidelines for children: https://www.cdc.gov/physical-activity-basics/guidelines/children.html

USDA MyPlate, Kids (link unverified: connection closed during browser check): https://www.myplate.gov/life-stages/kids

Web version of this note: https://www.animate-eu.com/public/news/active/375/McKinsey

Prepared November 2026 by Three Habits Lab.